"Good hand-washing and vaccination are the best ways to prevent hepatitis A in at-risk individuals," said Sietske de Fijter, state epidemiologist and chief of the ODH Bureau of Infectious Diseases. "If you or someone you know has one or more risk factors for hepatitis A, call your local health department to see about getting vaccinated."

ODH has provided approximately 56,000 doses of hepatitis A vaccine to local health departments. Declaring a hepatitis A outbreak ensures ODH access to additional hepatitis A vaccine through the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Anyone can be at risk for hepatitis A. People at an increased risk for hepatitis A include those who have direct contact with individuals infected with the virus; travelers to countries where the virus is prevalent; men who have sex with men; people who use street drugs whether they are injected or not; people with blood clotting factor disorders; people with chronic liver disease; and household members and other close contacts of adopted children newly arrived from countries where hepatitis A is common.

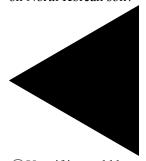

Ohio's hepatitis A outbreak cases appear to be primarily among people who use illegal drugs, those who have been incarcerated, people who (https://www.galioninguirer.com/features/health/42524/ohio-declares/alawnscapentalinguirer.com/features/health/42524/ohio-declares/alawnscapentalinguirer.com/features/health/42524/ohio-declares/health/42524/ohio-declares/statewide+hepatitus+A+outbreak)

The Galion City Health Department investigates all hepatitis A cases within their jurisdiction. Public health workers interview people diagnosed with hepatitis A to identify other individuals who may have been in close contact with them. The public health workers assess these individuals to determine whether they should receive post-exposure vaccination as a precaution so that they don't get the hepatitis A virus and spread it to others.

Symptoms of hepatitis A include fatigue, low appetite, stomach pain, nausea, clay-colored stools and jaundice. People with hepatitis A can experience mild illness lasting a few weeks to a severe illness lasting several months.
